Inspired by the Cineclubs of Bogotá, the Cinema Klandestino Collective have spent the past year bringing the best of Latin American cinema, old and new, to a Bristolian audience

Launched in November 2007, Cinema Klandestino is Bristol's roving underground cinema club, screening features, documentaries and shorts on a weekly basis and providing a non-profit alternative to mainstream cinema for a weekly fee of only two British pounds – all of which goes to improving their setup and sourcing new films.

Borne out of a do-it-yourself philosophy, Kolectivo Klandestino have a conscious commitment to providing a space for exploring the cultures, societies and politics of Latin America and an opportunity for Bristolians to engage with film and one another.

Situated in an ever-expanding series of squatted spaces and independent Social Centres, the occasional Scout Hut and in people's homes, CineK explores the geogra-

Cinema Klandestino is plugged firmly into the Bristol's alternative cultural scene. From their Latin niche within the city's vibrant independent cinema culture the collective have forged links with numerous other groups in the city, working with them to cross-promote independent

On top of their staple weekly events, the collective have an occasional arrangement with Bristol's Cube Microplex, bringing their philosophy of participation to the overground.

Previous outings have included the UK premier of La Colombiana a documentary on the life of Colombian cumbia diva Totó La Momposina at which members of Totó's family made a guest appearance to talk with the audience about the film and demonstrate the cumbia rhythm en vivo.
